Parenting Style	The Guide, The Leader (Authoritative)	The Boss (Authoritarian)	The Servant, The Bystander (Permissive)
The parents	 Are approachable, reasonable, and flexible. Attempt to direct the child's activities, but in a rational, issue-oriented manner. 	 Are frequently uncompromising, dictatorial, strict, and repressive. Attempt to shape, control, and evaluate the behavior and attitudes of the child in accordance with some kind of absolute standard 	 Are often passive, weak, inconsistent, and yielding. Consult with the child too much about policy decisions and give too many explanations for family rules. Don't ask the child to clean or take on many household responsibilities. Allow the child to regulate his own activities as much as possible.
The child	➤ Is encouraged to think and to be a participant in the family.	Must obey!	 Is subtly encouraged to control others. Is left to follow their own wants and instincts.
The power	> Is shared between parents and child.	Is with the parents.	o Is firmly in the hands of the child.
Life at home can be	Relaxed.Orderly.Consistent.	Tense.Rigid.Oppressive	o Chaotic. o Uncontrollable. o Wild.
Discipline tools	 Parents exert firm control at points of parent-child divergence but do not hem the child in with restrictions. Parents use reason as well as power to achieve objectives. Requests. Incentives. Consequences. Negotiation. Conflict resolution. Family councils. 	 Parents value obedience as a virtue and favor punitive, forceful measures to curb self-will at points when the child's actions or beliefs conflict with what parents think is correct conduct. Yelling. Commanding. Ordering. Rewarding. Punishing. 	 Parents try not to exercise control and don't encourage the child to obey externally defined standards. Parents are tolerant and accepting toward child's impulses, using as little punishment as possible. Pleading. Waiting and wishing. Giving up and doing nothing.
(Page 1-of-2)

. .

Parenting Style	The Guide, The Leader (Authoritative)	The Boss (Authoritarian)	The Servant, The Bystander (Permissive)
The effect on the child	 Positively associated with independent, purposive, dominant behaving. Positively associated with good grades. Child develops self-discipline. Child is able to focus on the needs of the group. 	 Associated with low levels of independence and social responsibility as well as lower cognitive competence. Negatively associated with good grades. Child learns to obey out of fear of punishment. Child learns to subvert and manipulate underhandedly. Child is so used to being controlled that they doesn't learn to develop self-control, and as a result can often be unruly and uncooperative when parents aren't present. 	 Associated with lack of impulse control and social responsibility, as well as low levels of independence and self-reliance. Negatively associated with good grades. Lower social and cognitive competence. Child becomes self-centered and demanding. Child doesn't learn the importance of consideration of others or of the needs of the group. Child develops little self-control.
The parent-child relationship	 Close, respectful, and marked by sharing and communication. Parents encourage verbal give and take, and share with the child the reasoning behind the policy. Encourages the child's independence and individuality. Recognizes the rights of both parents and children. 	 Cold, rigid, and based on fear. Verbal interchange between parent and child is discouraged. Instead, children are taught to blindly accept the parents' word on the way things ought to be. 	 Distant and often marked by resentment and manipulation. Parents make few demands for mature behavior and without limits the child can feel unloved and uncared for.